BIOGRAPHY

Dr. Vincent Francisco is KHF Professor of Community Leadership, Department of Applied Behavioral Science, and Senior Scientist with the Institute for Life Span Studies. He is Director of the Work Group for Community Health and Development, a WHO Collaborating Centre at the University of Kansas. In his work, he uses behavioral science to help understand and improve conditions that affect population health and health equity. He is co-developer of the Community Tool Box, a widely-used Internet-based resource for promoting community health and development.

Dr. Francisco has experience in the research and evaluation of community-based intervention programs focusing on promoting healthy adolescent development, reduction of risk for HIV/AIDS, teen substance abuse, youth violence, teen parenthood, and chronic/cardiovascular diseases. He works with community initiatives to help them build capacity for systems change, create environments in which those organizations can succeed in accomplishing their mission, and evaluate those interventions within an open systems environment. Many of these projects include state and federally funded community coalitions, especially Drug Free Communities. The communities with whom he has worked include inner city and rural communities of color, tribal and first nations communities (both reservation and inner city), and marginalized communities in countries outside North America. Dr Francisco has been a technical consultant for best practices identification initiatives such as The Guide to Community Preventive Services, and served on the board of Healthier Cities and Communities.

In addition, Dr Francisco partners with community based organizations and advocacy groups to collaboratively develop interventions at the individual and small group level. He has experience in developing and providing behavioral treatment for high-risk youth and those experiencing clinical-level problems. Settings for this experience include residential and day treatment, but also include community settings more broadly. Further, Dr Francisco has taught university courses at the undergraduate and graduate levels in individual and community health intervention development.
